Your connection to protecting those who improve your community

Guidance for Re-Opening your Operations

Nonprofit and social service organizations face unique risks when deciding to restart programs and operations during and after a pandemic. Youth programs, meal service, customer transportation, halls rented for special events and fitness spaces are just some of the operations that face the challenges of safely protecting their clients, employees and volunteers while offering the services that their communities need.

Take action now to help protect your organization against loss when re-opening. Specialty Human Services has curated the most recent best practices from the Centers for Disease Control and Johns Hopkins University to help your nonprofit or service organization implement practices that will help you safely re-open your operations.
